Kossuth Museum – Cegléd, Múzeum Street

Founded in 1917, the Kossuth Museum of Cegléd is one of the largest public collections in Pest County. With its name, the founders wanted to commemorate not only Lajos Kossuth but the entire family, as several members, including Ferenc Kossuth, were connected to the political and social life of Cegléd. The Kossuth Museum is one of the oldest institutions in Cegléd; for decades it has been collecting and preserving local history, ethnographic, numismatic, fine art, and archaeological artifacts. Its diverse collections, varied exhibitions, publications, and events, as well as its circle of museum friends, make it an indispensable institution in the city today.

Kossuth Statue – Cegléd, Szabadság Square

In the three-figure creation of sculptor János Horvay, the central figure is naturally Kossuth himself. On the pedestal, two additional figures appear — a young soldier holding a flag and a father bidding farewell to him.

The statue of Kossuth, standing in the center of Szabadság Square, is one of the most attractive sights of the square and one of the most beautiful expressions of the city's Kossuth cult. It was unveiled on September 18, 1902, on the eve of the 100th anniversary of Kossuth's birth, during a solemn celebration.

The most beautiful part of the statue is Kossuth's head, for which Kossuth's son, Ferenc Kossuth, assisted the sculptor. The beauty of the side figure of the father saying goodbye is also unforgettable — the elderly parent was modeled after a Cegléd citizen, Sámuel Lédeczi. A copy of the statue has stood in New York since 1928.

Kossuth Balcony – Cegléd, Szabadság Square

The balcony of the former Green Tree Inn of Pozsony was relocated in 1996 to its present place, into the garden of the Reformed Great Church of Cegléd.

Among the Kossuth memorials, we can also visit the Kossuth Balcony located in the church garden. These stones once belonged to the Green Tree Inn in Pozsony, from which Kossuth introduced Lajos Batthyány, the first responsible Prime Minister of Hungary. The balcony was restored and placed in its present location on September 24, in the millennium year of the Hungarian Conquest.

Reformed Great Church – Cegléd, Szabadság Square

Standing in the center of Cegléd, in the middle of Szabadság Square, is the church building with a Greek cross ground plan and covered with a dome.

The Reformed Great Church, one of the symbols of Cegléd, towers over Szabadság Square. Designed by József Hild and later reconstructed, it is the largest Reformed church in Central Europe. It was built between 1835 and 1870 in the Classicist style. The foundation stone was laid in 1835, consecrated in 1871, and later reconstructed between 1895 and 1896. The dome burned down in 1936, and during reconstruction it was built higher than the original.

Since May 2002, the church has been enriched with a new electronic concert organ, designed and built by Péter Albert, an electrical engineer from Miskolc. The four-manual, 63-register organ perfectly meets the performance needs of both Baroque and modern music. Since the opening concert, regular performances have been held here, enriching the musical life of the city.

The church, a defining element of the cityscape, can accommodate 2400 people. Its main façade with twin towers features a portico supported by four Ionic columns and a tympanum. Under the tympanon the following inscription can be read: "Come unto me, all ye that labour."

Dózsa Statue – Cegléd, Kossuth Square

The Dózsa statue on Kossuth Square commemorates György Dózsa, leader of the 1514 peasants' revolt, whose connection to Cegléd is preserved by tradition. To commemorate this, the current two-figure Dózsa monument was unveiled on June 25, 1972, during a national celebration. The statue is the work of József Somogyi, a Kossuth Prize-winning sculptor.

Holy Cross Catholic Church – Cegléd, Kossuth Square

On Kossuth Square stands the Classicist church dedicated to the Exaltation of the Holy Cross. On this site, in the 14th–15th centuries, there was a chapel dedicated to Saint Anne. Queen Elizabeth donated the town of Cegléd in 1368 to the Clarissa nuns of Óbuda. The present church was built on the site of the Gothic church that was demolished in 1821.

It was designed by Ferenc Homályossy (Tunkel), a master builder from Szolnok, and consecrated on August 31, 1827. The main altar was made by Lőrinc Dunaiszky in 1830, and the main altarpiece, depicting the Calvary scene, was painted in the same year by József Schöff, a painter from Pest.

Evangelical Church – Cegléd, Bercsényi Street

The slender-towered, well-proportioned building on today's Szabadság Square is one of the city's most beautiful public buildings.

The Evangelical Church, with its neo-Gothic style and slender tower, dominates the other side of the square. It was designed by Budapest architect Ottó Sztehlo. The bazaar wings on both sides of the church were built first, and then on November 31, 1896, the new house of worship was consecrated. The altarpiece was painted by artist Károly Jakoby, and a baptismal font stands before it. In its external appearance, the building resembles a fortress, referring to the Evangelical greeting: "The Lord is our stronghold."

The long-established congregation was founded in 1802; though its numbers have slightly diminished, worship services for about 340 Evangelicals are still held on Sundays and holidays at 10 AM.
